PROFILE

I love web development because in it I have discovered a source of endless opportunities to satisfy my desire to learn, flex my creative muscles, and problem solve as an individual, as part of a team, and a global community.

As a software engineer, I draw from the skills I have developed at BrainStation, whilst harnessing a wide range of professional practices through my time as Communications & Fundraising Manager at a regional LGBT+ youth charity. I have worked enthusiastically and responsibly as a “one person department”, whilst welcoming opportunities to collaborate with adjacent teams, stakeholders and service users. My suitability for this industry is found primarily in my patience, attention to detail and adaptability, which I have honed through a varied workload on both long-term projects and reactive, time-sensitive assignments alike. My excitement to continue my professional journey in software engineering stems from an eagerness to be a part of an ever-evolving industry, to continue learning, and to contribute to an organisation I am passionate about, as a valued member of your community.
